POINTS OF INTEREST

A In 1970 an early Neolithic trackway was discovered on Shapwick Heath by local peat cutter Ray Sweet. The wooden structure is thought to run over 2km and was named the Sweet Track after the founder.

B The Shapwick Canoe is a flat bottomed Iron Age canoe made from a single trunk of oak; discovered in 1906 it was originally displayed in the Griffin's Head Inn - a public house in Shapwick (no longer present) near to where it was found.

C One foggy August morning in 1949, a peat train became stuck where the track crossed the main line causing a passenger train from Glastonbury to crash into the South Drain.

D Arthur Bulleid was the first to record the Meare Heath trackway in 1890, its construction is more substantial than some of the other tracks such as the nearby Eclipse trackway.

E Beckery was originally a village outside of Glastonbury; evidence of prehistoric and roman activity have been uncovered at The Mound (sometimes called Glastonbury Castle) a natural feature destroyed in 1970.

F Glastonbury Iron Age Lake Village was discovered by Arthur Bulleid who recognised features in the landscape as being the same as those at a European lake village site.

G A duck decoy was noted at Meare Farm as early as 1685, it was still in use in 1740 by which time it had given its name to a ditch, which is still known as Decoy rhyme to this day.

H Wildfowl were an important food source in the area, duck decoys were tapering net pipes used to trap wild-fowl and were recorded in use from the late 17th century.

I The 1773 Inclosure Act enabled land owners to enclose land, removing access rights for commoners. it was frequently abused and until 1774 property could be redistributed without notification to residents.

J Meare east and west Iron Age Lake Villages have been intermittently excavated since 1908, they are thought to have been used seasonally for markets and meetings.

K The medieval Abbot's Fish House stood on the edge of Meare Pool, housing the chief fisherman of the Abbot of Glastonbury. A boat was sent from the Abbey to collect fish once a week.

L The 14th Century Manor Farm house included a chapel chamber. The stone finial above the porch is reputed to be the Abbot Richard Whiting of Glastonbury.

M The Church of St Mary was dedicated in 1323, the chancel and tower are original with the nave being rebuilt around 1470.
